

CASTLEWOOD PRODUCTIONS

Andrew Burnstein is the founder & President of Castlewood Productions Inc, a globally oriented provider of factual content, primarily for television.

From Shark Week to the National News, Andrew Burnstein has excelled in creating award-winning programming across a broad spectrum of factual genres including science, nature, health, sports, and lifestyle.

Andrew's diverse career in broadcast media began in his hometown of Vancouver as a reporter and writer for BCTV News. Prior to forming Castlewood in late 2007 he was a producer at CBC and TSN, and for 6 years headed EPI, the production and distribution arm of Discovery Channel Canada.

Career highlights include participation as a producer, director and writer for episodes of CBC Television's most ambitious documentary project, Canada: A People's History (2001), and more recently, as Director of EPI, Andrew was intricately involved in financing and production of at least a dozen International Treaty Co-Productions with broadcasters in the UK, France, South Africa, Australia, and Germany. Castlewood has recently completed programming for CBC Television, is currently producing two series for Discovery Channel including season 8 of Cash Cab, and is in pre-production on a new series for Shaw Media.

Andrew is a graduate of both University of British Columbia and British Columbia Institute of Technology. He lives with his family in Toronto.
